Donna ran from past into bright future

Runners stretched, jogged in place and snapped photos as they waited last month for the start of the 43rd New York City Marathon.

Entrant 64-654 tapped text messages to two daughters and a son.

"I want to dedicate this race to you to show you that no matter what happens in life, you can do anything."

Now, she really was committed to run all 26.2 miles.

Donna Cacciato - proud mom, loving wife, resilient woman, 48-year-old Village of Amelia resident - had to cross the finish line.

She'd waited three years for this moment. Donna had applied and was rejected in 2010 and 2011. In 2012, Superstorm Sandy canceled the event.

Colony Care Center celebrates year of providing primary care in a different way

THE VILLAGES It was one year ago today that The Villages Health really took root in Florida's Friendliest Hometown.

That's because it marked the opening of Colony Care Center and the beginning of providing a different kind of medical care for Villagers. It also marked the start of an initiative that already has seen a second care center - Santa Barbara - open in the community, with another - Pinellas - scheduled to follow this month.

Toss in the Belleview Care Center, which became part of The Villages Health when it merged with Family Doctors of Belleview, as well as two more primary care facilities - Mulberry and Lake Sumter Creekside - that will open in the spring. Then consider the new USF Health Specialty Care Center, and it's safe to say the drive to provide better health care is off and running strong here.

A makeshift memorial with crosses for the victims of the Sandy Hook massacre stands outside a home in Newtown, Conn., on Saturday, the one-year anniversary of the shootings.

Bells toll in Newtown for school shooting victims

Bells tolled 26 times to honor the children and educators killed one year ago in a shooting rampage at Sandy Hook Elementary School as local churches held memorial services and the country marked the anniversary with events including a White House moment of silence.

With snow falling and homes decorated with Christmas lights, Newtown looked every bit the classic New England town, with a coffee shop and general store doing steady business. But reminders of the private grief were everywhere. "God bless the families," read a sign posted at one house in the green and white colors of the Sandy Hook school, and a church posted that it was "open for prayer." Story, A8

Florida focus*Foster boy to spend holiday with possible adoptive family

A 15-year-old foster child who went to a St. Petersburg church to plead for a family earlier this year is getting to spend the holidays with his prospective adoptive parents.

His story: When he heard his birth mother had died last spring, Davion Only decided to find someone to adopt him. He went to St. Mark Missionary Baptist Church and told a story that prompted a nationwide response with more than 10,000 inquiries from potential families. Davion, who was born in prison and raised in foster care, has been living in a group home with 12 other boys and has never had his own room.

His journey: But Davion recently moved out of his group home and into a foster home where he is getting to know the family who hope to adopt him, said Jody Grutzka, a vice president for Eckerd, which contracts with the state to handle foster care in southwest Florida.

"Eckerd is humbled at the continued outpouring of support for Davion and his quest for a forever family. We know that there is great interest in who will become Davion's forever family, but we request patience and understanding as we protect the delicate process of identifying the most appropriate family for Davion," she said in an email.
